It has a fairly steep learning curve, but once you get comfortable with the interface, Photoshop makes image manipulation fast and easy. In Chapter 9, we discuss using Photoshop for business and marketing projects. Adobe provides a free 30-day trial (not the full version of Photoshop) if you go to www.adobe.com/student/photoshop_edu.html. Photoshop's odd name, which you hear in the back of some people's minds when they talk about it, comes from its place of birth. The program's creators decided to name it after the effects it could achieve rather than after its home studio. Blending Hue and Saturation Blending hues and saturation is a simple, yet powerful, way to change the look of an image. You can use it to add a little more color, make an image more playful, or create an illusion of a special effect. When you have two colors — in this case, a neutral gray (shown in Figure 5-4) and a bright red (shown in the top image of the figure) — your eye's perception of the color is affected by brightness, clarity, and contrast. Changing the hue and saturation at the same time is a simple way to change the colors in an image, making it appear more vibrant and alive. Figure 5-4: Painting on the image using different hues and saturation options. To change the appearance of an image, go to the Image⇒Adjustments⇒Hue/Saturation menu. Choose a color from the color palette and drag it onto the image. Figure 5-5 shows an example of this process. Figure 5-5: Change the hue and saturation of the image by choosing a color and dragging it over the image. If you use Photoshop for painting on your images, you can make paintovers easily — that is, make pixels transparent. Just open the image and paint on the layer that's showing. As you paint, the paintover blends with the previous image layer's color. Blend mode: Normal, Multiply, and Screen After you paint or draw on your image, its layer can be chosen with the Select tool. In addition to this tool, you have several tools to change the appearance and color of an image. The blending modes are color adjustments you can use to change the look of an image. In Photoshop, you can

How dentists can attract more patients How to increase the number of people that visit your dentistry practice can be a tricky business. Of course, you can't force people to come and see you. Fortunately, there are some simple strategies and marketing tools that you can implement to increase the number of people that you see. Blogging is a great way to increase the number of people that visit your business. You can write helpful information and leave a link at the top of your blog. This is a great way to not only inform people about your services, but also to encourage them to schedule an appointment. When you visit a page on your website that is related to your practice, place your location on it. If people are searching for dentists in your area and they find the information on your website, you can add "Patient Referral" to the end of your website link. Promote your practice through social media. You can use photos to show the office and talk about the types of services that you offer. You can also post or tweet about patients that have found you on the internet. This month we would like to tell you about a local business that we have been working with for many years, Dimas Dental. As our patient referral program has grown and evolved with us, Dimas Dental has not only been willing to embrace the changes, but has provided the tools and technical support that we have needed to successfully implement our new programs. If you aren't yet sending patient referral information to your dentist, then you should start with today. You can easily identify a practice's link on Google or other search engine sites. Once you identify the website, you can then leave a brief comment on the website or click on a hyperlink to refer the person to your practice. If you would like to read more about Dentist Marketing and the new referral programs, take a look at our article "How to Generate More Patients" at DentalMarketing.com. Contact us at the office or on our blog to discuss your concerns, or you can visit www.DentalMarketing.com to get all the information that you need. [audio mp3=""][/audio] Office
