A recent study revealed that one out of every three men and one in five women are suffering from sexual dysfunction. But only one in four of these sufferers seek help – which leaves a lot of men and women suffering in silence. This is why the Domestic Abuse Centre (DAC) is adamant that the tide needs to be turned. In order to combat this issue and encourage individuals to come forward, a few individuals have come together to create a new charity. One that will look into the topic of sexual dysfunction in domestic abuse, and how this can be addressed. The group, spearheaded by the charity's founder, Joanna Hurley, have unveiled the Newbridge Association for Men's Counselling (Newbridge AMC), which will specialise in helping sufferers of the condition. The charity will offer counselling, education and in some cases, further courses, all with the aim of helping and assisting the many men suffering with the condition. "Domestic violence is almost exclusive to men," says Joanna. "Men do suffer, and they need help and support from the outside world, this is where the charity will be providing its services. Sexual dysfunction was not previously considered a part of domestic abuse but over recent years, research has revealed it is a huge factor. "It is often a front for emotional and physical abuse. In some cases, sufferers may also be infertile as a result of the abuse they have endured. We will assist with educating and counselling men, but only with the condition presented by them, so not just the symptoms." The charity hopes to grow over the coming years. Joanna is keen to establish a good understanding between men who suffer from the disorder and other men, wanting to promote a healthy discussion between the two groups. "We also want to highlight the fact that domestic abuse can affect not just men but women too. And although we are a men's only group, we don't want to discriminate and therefore intend to have members that can offer counselling and support to both male and female sufferers of the disorder."
