What's New In Adobe Photoshop CC 2015 Version 17?

Kaspersky Lab Recommends Users Disconnect from Untrustworthy Websites The Russian cybersecurity giant Kaspersky Lab on Tuesday urged its global users to disconnect from untrustworthy websites, following a shortwave radio campaign — sponsored by Kaspersky's Russian office — urging the same. “These untrustworthy websites are usually created by other malware authors as an additional way to spread their malware. To be safe, users should disconnect from any website not under their control,” the company wrote on its blog. Kaspersky Lab on Tuesday also said it had taken “action to monitor the situation,” and encouraged users to report any suspicious websites or add it to your updated safe list. A shortwave radio, which broadcasts over frequencies that are not normally used by most users, aired a short message in several Russian cities and regions on Tuesday, warning residents to be vigilant. This follows the company’s previous warnings over the weekend on the potential threat of fake news. “I am asking you to be vigilant, because the threat of spreading fake news online, as well as the threat of phishing emails and web lockers, still exists. We must remain vigilant and careful not to put ourselves in situations that could put us at risk of having our data stolen or finding ourselves being taken advantage of,” Kaspersky Lab CEO Eugene Kaspersky said. The Kaspersky Lab’s shortwave radio campaign was sponsored by its Russian office, and was produced by Teneo Corporate Communications, in cooperation with Russia’s Federal Protective Service. European banking firms allege that Kaspersky Lab sells sensitive information to the Russian government and that the company’s CEO has strong ties to the Kremlin. The CEO’s brother is an official with the Russian Federal Protective Service (FSO), a special division of the Russian National Guard. The company was sanctioned by the U.S. government in May, 2017, due to Russian allegations of conducting cyber espionage. The U.S. also banned U.S. companies from using the company’s software. While Kaspersky Lab has denied providing any information to the Russian government, the company said it has “never worked for or with any government to provide them with cyber information or provide other forms of technical assistance.” The company also indicated that the sanction was prompted by Russian speculation of ties to the 2016 election.
