What's New In DBug?

dBug helps you run any anti-malware tool without being blocked by your system. You can disable itself when you think you are getting close to the end by running it one last time. It will stop malicious actions, which means that anti-malware tools will then be able to identify malware hidden in common files and applications, and they can then remove it. For instance, when malware hits your system, it might inject itself into explorer.exe in order to gain control and, thus, be able to affect the whole system. dBug will prevent the malware from taking this action (instruct it to run instead), giving you time to perform an online scan with anti-malware tools like Panda Cloud Scanner which can remove the malicious software before it proceeds to infect your entire system. When dBug is running, you can change its status at anytime and you can disable it to execute any anti-malware tool in order to remove malware from the system. dBug is the best Anti-Malware Tool when malware has been installed. It is like a small protection layer to help you remove malware. No installation required, just download to a folder, double click to run, and you are done. It will start working immediately. dBug will check the system for malicious software and then block executable files from being executed, so anti-malware tools will be able to remove it. dBug will stop malicious software from loading, which means that anti-malware tools can then see and remove the malicious software. dBug is a small executable that runs in system memory as a normal application. There is no installation process to deal with. Important: dBug cannot remove malware from your system. For that you will need an anti-malware tool such as Panda Cloud Scanner to remove it. dBug will block malicious software from running, so anti-malware tools like Panda Cloud Scanner can remove it. If dBug is no longer running, malware will be able to take control of your computer again.
