Features of Fear of the Unknown: Single player adventure game Multiple story scenes to play through. Solvable puzzles Engaging and dark atmosphere Fully voice-acted audio In-game environments designed with a story/history lesson Fully rendered environments and character models * REVIEWS

*Reviews are fairly positive about this game, but some critics may be "old school" when it comes to horror games. I think that these modern gamers who can enjoy these horror games but wish they were done the way they used to be. See reviews below: I found this game to be very good. If you're a fan of the game types of "interactive story games" where you explore and listen to story while discovering the "truth," then this game is for you. Atmospheric character models help you to relate to the characters in the game. The main character Edward Hevaney makes for a very sympathetic figure that I liked. I also enjoyed the alternate story environments, especially the mortuary which was very effective. Overall, this is a good horror game, and I recommend it to any horror fan that enjoys interactive story games. I believe that this is the type of game that a computer game reviewer like myself can appreciate. This game is worth trying out. It's fun, exciting and scary! Bloody Horror - It is creepy as all get out. You start the game in a hallway with no one around and listen to a news report about the grisly murder that happened earlier. You meet a detective and then begin to search the house and complete many puzzles to find out the truth.

Evil Dead - A classic horror movie which will give you nightmares.

The game will start you in a hallway with no one around and as you explore you will find a trail of blood leading to the room where the grisly murder took place.

The Last Horror Game - I believe this is the first horror game for this platform. It's a complete horror experience. It starts you in a stairwell and then puts you in a corridor with only a flashlight.

You find out that someone died and you need to find their body. You do that by finding and clicking on the pulse in the chest and completing puzzles. The experience is really good for a first horror game. I liked this game a lot. *

What's new:

When you are engaging in a new endeavor, a rite of passage, a change to your routine, you are fearful of what might not turn out and what you might find. You want to know there will be an identifiable outcome. What you don't want to have happen is for the fear to overwhelm you and you to say no not because you do not want to take the initiative but instead, you want to stick with what you know because it is familiar. You don't want to feel anxious. You are still a young adult even if you are in your fifties. Entering a new venture into your life is like doing therapy. You have to learn how to lose your perspective. Look at what you have learned and of what you know. And of new things, you will never know how it will go. You will always remain a beginner at it. In therapy and in life we learn and we grow and change. As a therapist, I call this becoming self-reflective. What that means is, I must learn to look in the mirror, to observe what I do and why I do it. You have to learn to observe your thinking. How we think and how we act is all based on our experience. I don't want to be the same person to others as I am to myself. Walking Therapy Here is your treatment plan: 1. Remember the cartwheel! Before you walk, roll your arms in front of you and up over your head like a cartwheel. Remember it! The funniest thing I see in people who do not do this, is that they think they should be able to do cartwheels. They know doing cartwheels is easier and better. Doing this creates awareness of your posture. 2. I am not my body. My body is but a frame. I am a spirit. A non-physical, non-material part of who I am. I choose where I put my body. I can put it anywhere and still feel it. By way of example: We may be depressed, scared, but that does not mean we are sick. We may not know how else to talk; we may be feeling pain but that does not mean we are stuck inside the pain; or we may be in despair. We must realize we are not defined by our thoughts and feelings. We have come back to the idea that we are not defined by our thinking, or our feeling. This is not about not reacting
