The gameplay consists of collecting magic coins and using them to teleport to a portal to progress. I have created a function to test for a coin and whether its a magic or not. If it's a magic coin, it's set to invisible and you know that this is the page you are on. However, if its non-magic, then i set it to visible and the game then proceeds as normal. This works fine for the majority of the levels but i have run into one problem. At the end of one of the levels i need to have a special page which will be always visible. I can't seem to figure out how to make it so that when you complete that last level it will always start on this page. Right now if you are on the wrong page and you press stop, it will just stop the game all together. I have an idea to have a 'stop' button on all the other pages if they are the right page and you press it, it will instantiate the magic coin. If its the right page, it will run the previous page. Does this make sense? A: It sounds to me as if you've designed your game so that anything that can get a player into a game is a valid placement point. If you absolutely want to stop on a certain event or from a certain placement, you could always check the level and if its the last level, update the currently playing level accordingly. This way you'll be sure that you'll stop on the right level. Colin Young (racewalker) Colin John Young (born 18 April 1964) is a male retired British race walker. Athletics career A
