Q: Why people still use postfix even when they use Gmail/Gsuite/Yahoo/etc? I'm doing some research about the differences in the usage of the Postfix email server versus the Gmail/Gsuite/Yahoo/Hotmail et al services. Google, Yahoo et al are more known than some businesses in the industry, which are hosted by the postfix service. What I have studied till now from the above website is Gmail (provided by Google) is a web-based email service which is similar to Microsoft's Hotmail or Yahoo Mail. It was launched in 2004 and is an Internet service run by Google. Gmail can be accessed through your web browser or through an iPhone, Android, or Microsoft Outlook app. The Gmail service offers free accounts and paid accounts. Free accounts have less storage space and quota of 1GB storage and are only available for personal use. Paid accounts are also known as business-class accounts which offer unlimited storage and users may also benefit from other advanced features including the ability to set up filters, and they have an address verification process for improved security. Free accounts are available around the world, with some restrictions. Paid accounts in some countries may or may not be available. Read more

However, after I done some research on the postfix.com website, I find that it can be hosted by the postfix.com service and provides free account for personal use. What are the factors which people still choose to use postfix when they can have Gmail/Gsuite/Yahoo/Hotmail et al? Is it mainly the reliability of the service or the email delivery time-effectiveness? A: Generally speaking, there are two main categories of email service providers out there: the ones you know and the ones you don't know, and the Gmail/Yahoo/etc provider is in the second group. The first category includes the large Internet providers like Comcast and AT&T that you're familiar with, the clear-cut providers like Google, Yahoo, etc. and the strange ones like the person renting an address from a postal box company. These companies have a lot of name recognition and they've been around long enough that you can't avoid them easily. The second category includes the so-called "high-end" providers who sometimes get a bad name because of their price but generally

INTRODUCTION {#sec1} ===== A pseudoaneurysm is a cystic projection along a vessel wall that contains a thrombus, but does not have the characteristics of an aneurysm. The true incidence of pseudoaneurysm is difficult to estimate, as its clinical presentation is variable.[@bib1] Trauma is the most common cause of pseudoaneurysm of the carotid artery.[@bib1] Other possible causes are infection, iatrogenic, and drug-induced vascular injuries.[@bib1] Here we report a patient with a spontaneous carotid-ophthalmic artery pseudoaneurysm secondary to blunt traumatic injury. To our knowledge, this is the first published case of an optic nerve pseudoaneurysm as a result of blunt carotid artery injury.

CASE REPORT {#sec2} ===== A 36-year-old, previously healthy, non-smoker, Caucasian male presented to our emergency department after a motorcycle accident with GCS 15 and documented carotid injury. He was awake and alert and able to follow verbal commands. His pupils were equal and reactive to light bilaterally, and visual acuity was 8/10 OU. He had a complex skull fracture and was given 2 units of packed red blood cells. A repeat CT angiography of the head and neck showed a widened right carotid artery at the level of the bifurcation with intimal injury (Fig. 1{ref-type="fig"}). No thrombus was noted. At presentation, an arteriography showed a pseudoaneurysm arising from the right ophthalmic artery (Fig. 2{ref-type="fig"}). There was direct communication between the pseudoaneurysm and the cavernous sinus. The right carotid artery appeared to be healthy on antero-posterior and lateral projections of the neck. After discussion at our trauma conference, we decided to proceed with a superior petrosal sinus drainage via a trans-ethmoidal and infra-temporal approach. There was poor visualization and the pseudoaneurysm was engaged with a micro-vascular clamp. A small rent was created in the pseudoaneurysm, allowing some blood to be observed. The pseudoaneurysm was then obliterated using coils and embolization was attempted
