Retouching Retouching is the use of tools and techniques to improve an image by revising small portions. Retouching techniques can range from a simple softening of a smile to removing a zit from a human face to correcting missing or incorrectly positioned objects in an image. Retouching is also used to help make a photo look more professional and more attractive. You can refer to Chapter 3 for an overview of retouching tools. * Paintbrush: This tool allows you to paint non-destructively on the background of an image. You can also use this tool to soften or reshape objects. * Blend: This tool blends two images to create a new image. You can use the blend tools to change the lighting and the color of objects in an image. * Image Processor: This tool is a newer version of the old Blend

Q: Is CMOS design a science? I have a friend who is a world-class CAD programmer, and he told me that CMOS design is a science. Is this true? Is it true that CMOS design is a science? Some obvious things: Possibility of independent optimization by a VLSI-scaled engineer Ability to validate a given design by using the actual CMOS components in the design, and in simulations

A: You can view it both ways. I would compare it to Physics more than Engineering. Physics is mechanical, electronics is electrical, CMOS is a combination of the two. There are a lot of variations with different vendors and different styles of circuits. It could be viewed as more of a craft. You just "could" get lucky or make a good design from educated guesses. "Could" is a key part of the "science" part.
