A: Quick Answer Human skin is subject to many different factors that affect color, including seasonal changes, skin discoloration and pregnancy, explains Milk+Coffee. A darker color often occurs when air enters the skin because of cold conditions, according to Elephant Talk. Cold air naturally spreads the melanin pigment farther, making dark patches on the skin's surface. Keep Learning If you don't have brown arms during the winter, you might have a high fever and think that your color isn't real, says EDN.
