Speaker of the Parliament of England The Speaker of the House of Commons of England is the presiding officer of the House of Commons. Etymology The term "speaker" dates back to the earliest time when the House of Commons sat in Westminster Hall, and it has only ever referred to the Speaker of the Commons, who was not a Lord but merely a Member of the House, in the sense of a normal Member of Parliament. As the privileges, functions and duties of the Lord Speaker were transferred to the Speaker of the House of Commons, the title was expanded to include the Speaker of the House of Commons, which then became the presiding officer, as well as the Speaker of the House of Lords, who is commonly but misleadingly called the Lord Speaker. The formal title is recognized by Standing Orders of the House of Commons, where the office is described as the Speaker and Chairman, which are both abbreviated to Speaker. These are further defined by the explanatory notes as "the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the House of Lords". A Speaker's duties are described as being "to preside in the House, to receive and report back any debate on any proposed question, and to put any question on the Order Paper". They are also "responsible for the general harmony and good order of the House". The Speaker is the first official to open any new parliamentary session, except in exceptional circumstances. If the House is in Committee of the Whole, the Chair is raised in the usual manner. If the House is not in Committee of the Whole, the Speaker remains seated but rises when the Chair is raised. In the United Kingdom, the Speaker is also a Representative of the British monarch. It is customary for the Speaker to take the oath of office at the same time the House took an oath of allegiance to the Crown. Since the constitutional crisis of 1931, all subsequent Speakers have always also taken the Oath of Supremacy. The Speaker's title is not only used within the Commons (by Members of the House of Commons), it is also used within the House of Lords. The historic titles of the Speaker of the Lords and the Speaker of the Commons have been the same, even during the period of the Personal Rule. In the reign of King Edward VII (1874–1901), because a speaker could be a member of either house, the Lords speaker became 6d1f23a050
