I can now start to think about the programming of the book. Of course, I am going to have to write a first chapter. First of all, I am going to describe this script. It is a casino game, in which you have to make a pair of matching cards with the same card color, ace to ace, to win a predetermined amount of money. You can go to the link below to see how it works. When the user starts this program, an card is displayed. The user first presses the "Start" button. Then when the "Start" button is pressed, the user presses the "Try Again" button, then the "Expire" button. The program checks if the "Try Again" button is pressed. If so, then the user waits for at least 1 sec (the time is variable). This wait time can be increased. If the user then presses the "Expire" button, then the program displays the message "You have won $500.00". Then, the program has a hardcoded "Win $5000". If the "Try Again" button is not pressed then the "Expire" button is pressed. Then, "Try Again" button is pressed again. If the user presses the "Try Again" button for the 2nd time, then the program displays the message "You have lost $0.00". Then, "Try Again" button is pressed again. If the user presses the "Try Again" button for the 3rd time, then the program displays the message "You are a cheater!". Then, the program ends. I haven't written any code
