Analysis and comparability of community-based coverage expansions of the essential benefit mandate under Medicaid. This study analyses the actuarial adequacy and budget impact of community-based expansions of the essential health benefits under Medicaid using a state-level framework that takes a life-cycle perspective. Our analysis demonstrates that community-based optional benefits strategies can save the state money, and the savings are comparable to those achieved by increases in Medicaid funding. We demonstrate the value of quantifying the amount of additional funding needed for the remaining uninsured. We also demonstrate the role of accounting for funding shortages in an optimal benefit design model. Chest wall radiotherapy for metastatic breast cancer. To assess the role of chest wall radiotherapy (CWRT) in the treatment of metastatic breast cancer. We reviewed our experience with CWRT, supplemented by a review of the literature. CWRT is indicated when there is a large, uni- or multifocal metastasis that will exert pressure on the pericardium or diaphragm, or in patients with symptomatic carcinomatosis. We reviewed our experience with CWRT from 1986 to 1994. CWRT has been used with curative intent for metastatic breast cancer since 1987. CWRT can be combined with other local modalities, such as intracavitary or systemic therapy. The pericardium can be treated at any time after the failure of systemic therapy. The overall response rate with any CWRT, including patients receiving irradiation for palliation, is 42%. Patients with diaphragmatic masses are more likely to respond to CWRT; however, only 13% of our patients had a diaphragmatic mass. No dose-response effect was seen for CWRT in the treatment of breast cancer. A subgroup of patients with breast cancer have a relatively high response rate and low toxicity to CWRT, making it an effective form of treatment. The majority of patients treated for palliative reasons have a long survival; and thus CWRT should be employed early in the course of therapy in any patient who has either an insidiously progressive or an unrelenting symptomatic lesion.Q: systemd service
