the 48 hour film project is on facebook and twitter, so you can follow the competition live. its great to see the creativity of people around the world, and we encourage everyone to participate. the best 48 hour films will be on display at 48hourfilmproject.com, where you can also check out the full list of prizes. we were all ready to go with a full-length feature. we made a test trailer that was 15 minutes long. i recorded my dialog, and did a rough edit. but i didnt know how to cut it down to the right length, and i didnt know how to make the transitions. i couldnt think how to get the shots to flow from one to the next. i ended up doing the first edit on my own, using premiere pro. i think i just cut and pasted. but i used a lot of footage that i had shot for testing in another project. you couldnt have scripted it better if you had spent all day making the movie, erica laughs. i was proud of myself - i really couldnt have done it without moviestorm. i still had to do the final edit, which was the toughest. after that, we started working on animating. i just tried to create something cool. i spent a lot of time trying to make the puppets look like people. i tried to create characters that would look like human beings. i was raised on movies, as i grew up in a house full of them. i remember sitting on my fathers lap as a kid, watching gone with the wind on tv and he would say, youre watching a movie, erica says. i dont think i could go back to tv, even though my parents bought me a tv and a vcr when i was in elementary school. i really didnt know how to watch it, and i didnt know how to stop it. i was more interested in the sound and the characters. all of my friends played with their video games, i was always playing with the moviestorm pack.
