Incidental findings in children with autism and those with other developmental disabilities in a tertiary care hospital in southern Taiwan. To determine the most common incidental findings in children with autism or other developmental disabilities referred to a tertiary hospital in southern Taiwan. The charts of 504 consecutive children with developmental disabilities (ASD n = 193; other diagnosis n = 311) who were admitted to a tertiary-care hospital between January 1, 2007 and December 31, 2010 were reviewed for age at referral and referral diagnosis and for incidental findings detected on physical examination, laboratory tests, and radiologic studies, as noted by the referring pediatrician and confirmed by a pediatrician or radiologist. The mean age at referral was 5.2 years (interquartile range: 4.0-6.8). Incidental findings were identified in 216 children (42.3%); of these, 182 (85.7%) had ASD and 34 (14.3%) had other diagnoses. In children with ASD, incidental findings were significantly more common among boys (52.8% vs 45.9%,  $P = 0.046$ ), those who were referred more than once (64.6% vs 47.2%,  $P = 0.004$ ), those who had a combination of two or more disorders (68.6% vs 48.0%,  $P = 0.001$ ), and those who were referred for neurodevelopmental assessment (55.5% vs 44.8%,  $P = 0.012$ ). Among the most common findings among children with ASD, micronodular cirrhosis, pituitary hypoplasia, glomerulosclerosis, and intrahepatic bile duct dilatation were found in more than 20%. The most common incidental findings in children with developmental disabilities were also related to the type of referral. These findings have implications for diagnostic work-up and treatment of children with developmental disabilities.
